The IFLA – International Federation of Landscape Architects is a democratic, apolitical and non-governmental, not-for-profit organization and has worked, since its creation in the promotion and recognition of Landscape Architecture as a profession.

Today, the International Labor Organization (ILO) has classified and defined the profession of landscape architecture in its list of professions through the Resolution: ISCO-08 2162 – Title: Landscape Architect.

Most members of this organization have successfully established such profession in the nations to which they belong or have contributed to its expansion, its recognition and appreciation. However, in some countries, like in Brazil, the recognition of Landscape Architecture as a profession and Landscape Architects as the suitable professionals to carry it out lacks of official recognition.

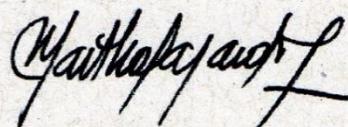

It is precisely to support and encourage the search for such recognition in those countries where this has not happened yet that for the last six decades IFLA has been working on attaining important achievements in conjunction with other international organizations, as the UNESCO. In this sense, IFLA has signed memoranda of understanding with the International Union of Architects (UIA) and the International Society of City and Regional Planners (ISOCARP). Through these agreements the distinctiveness and independence, as well as the authority and reputation of this unique profession that is Landscape Architecture was recognized.

IFLA supports the process of regulation of Landscape Architecture as an autonomous profession in Brazil, as it is expressed by the bylaw 2043/2011. This is an important step to achieve a strong academic and professional base to the future of Landscape Architecture in Brazil, and any measure in contrary does not stand with IFLA history and does not represent IFLA interests.
